ART TO BRIGHTEN PATIENTS' LIVES

ALTON Art Society have a collection of paintings on display at the Lord Mayor Treloar Hospital.

The society were first asked to help brighten the hospital's walls over two years ago and now the display is changed every three months by Gina Aronsberg, a member of the society.

Penny Jan, the hospital unit's development officer, said: "NHS funds allow us little scope for luxuries so the paintings are more than welcome.

"We hang them throughout the wards, the quiet rooms, the admin block and at the Alton General Hospital and the unit's clinics. Without them our walls would be very bare indeed."

Gina finds the work very rewarding: "Hospitals are not the happiest of places and the society are anxious to do what they can to provide some visual cheer."

GINA BRINGS HER VISUAL CHEER

Alton artist Gina Aronsberg will be loading her car with her latest collection of paintings for display at the Lord Mayor Treloar Hospital.

All the pictures are by members of Alton Art Society, which was first asked to help brighten the Hospital's walls over two years ago.

The display is now changed every three months when Gina pays her regular call there.

"N. H. S. funds allow us little scope for luxuries," said Penny Jann, the Hospital Unit's Development Officer. "The paintings are more than welcome. We hang them throughout the wards, the quiet rooms, the administration block and at Alton General Hospital and the unit's clinics. Without them, our walls would be very bare indeed."

Gina, herself a talented member of Alton Art Society, finds the work rewarding.

"Hospitals are not the happiest of places and the Society is anxious to do what it can to provide some visual cheer" she said.
